What's New?

ANNIVERSARY

New season, new goals, new opportunities, new merch, new mindset! This season has been full of change. A lot of shedding and redirecting. We recently removed our NBA Collection from the site due to copyright issues. Over the last three years, I've dabbled in many different art styles to finally discover what Art by Fanny Ariel truly represents.

Although I enjoy basketball and sneakers I had to learn to separate the two when it comes to ABFA and the brand. The site is currently back up and running and we removed anything that doesn't correlate with our mission. Our mission is to highlight cultures around the world and all their amazing attributes. I will be launching BlessedSolesFL later in the year and that will consist of all things sneakers and basketball related.

ILLUSTRATION OF THE MONTH

You don't have to be from a culture to experience their lifestyle, "Spicy Patty" was just that. I come from a very diverse background and when it came to discovering my art style my family history influenced all of my creativity. Once I realized how supportive and receptive my community was to the art I was producing I began to realize the effects of representation. Growing up in South Florida I was introduced to so many different cultures so it only felt right to represent for my neighbors as well.

On August 6th Jamaica celebrated 61 years of independence which inspired the making of Spicy Patty. In 3,846 intricate strokes, I depicted one of my favorite foods from the Jamaican culture being enjoyed by a melanated woman wearing traditional Jamaican garments. One of my favorite details was her big smile about to take a bite. Which made the illustration all the more personable.
